OPEC Calls Emergency Meetings

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches LAGOS - The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, seeking to buoy oil prices that have fallen sharply this month, has called an emergency meeting of its price and production committees for Sept. 7, OPEC's president announced

Rilwann Lukman, who is also Nigeria's oil minister, said he and ministers from Venezuela and Indonesia would also visit OPEC members to rally sup-port for production quotas that individual states are supposed to observe.

Prices have declined by around $3 a barrel this month. Traders mainly attribute the fall to reports of OPEC overproduction to meet rising de-mand from nations that, concerned by tension in the Gulf, were adding to their stockpiles.

Union Will Vote Today on Offer To End Strike

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches JOHANNESBURG -- Management and labor failed Tuesday to reach a settlement ending a 16-day strike by about 330,000 black miners, but the mine workers' leader, Cyril Ramaphosa, said that "prog-ress has been made" and scheduled a vote on a management proposal.

The National Union of Mineworkers said that members will vote Wednesday on a proposal that offers slight improvements in benefits but no wage increase. If the miners accept the offer, it will end the strike, which began

"But if our members reject the offer, the strike continues," Mr. Ramaphosa said at a news conference Tuesday night. He said the union leadership would not recommend either approval or rejection.

The union has sought to have death benefits increased to five times a miner's annual pay and to have the annual vacation increased to 30 days from the current average of 14 to 21 days.

The chamber made no new offers Tuesday to the union's other demands, which include a 30-percent pay raise and recognition of the anniversary of the Soweto riots of 1976, June 16, as a paid holiday. Mr. Liebenberg said that the union had dropped its demand for a 30-percent wage increase. "They moved off the 30 percent altogether," he said.

He said the employers had rejected a union appeal to convert available fringe benefit improvements into a wage increase. The negotiations followed a concession Monday by the dominant Anglo American Corp., which agreed to put wages on the agenda for the talks with other issues, including pensions and danger pay. A spokesman for Anglo American said that strikers began streaming back to work Tuesday at a number of its gold and coal mines. But a union spokesman, Kuben Pillay, said the return involved

N.Y. Bicyclists in Uproar

NEW YORK - Bicyclists protested as police banded out warning citations on the first day of an experimental ban against bike riding on three major Manharian avenues.

Four dozen police officers were dispatched to enforce the 90-day ban, which began Monday and is aimed in particular at private bicycle messengers. The measure is aimed at protecting New York pedestrians, who die at an average rate of two per year in collisions with bicycles. The ban outlaws cyclists on Fifth, Madison and Park avenues, on weekdays from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M.

Bicyclists planned to walk their vehicles en masse Wednesday down the sidewalks of Fifth Avenue, a protest they say complies with the ban. Bicycle riders have held slow-moving protests to snarl traffic several times since the ban was announced last month. The messengers are especially unhappy about the ban. One of them, Steve Athineos, a leader of the protests, handcuffed himself to a lamppost outside City Hall and was arrested.

LONDON - As the summer tourist season nears its peak weekend here, Britain's air traffic control system has been hit with computer failures, serious morale problems and a dispute over evidence that many near-collisions are going unre-

The Civil Aviation Authority has hired outside consultants to investigate a series of nine breakdowns in the new computer system that monitors all trans-Atlantic flights between the United States

The $10.8 million computer, located at Prestwick. Scotland, malfunctioned on Sunday and again on Monday, causing delays of up to two hours in flights bound for the United States from London's two major airports, Heathrow and

The computer, made by Digital Equipment Corp., a U.S. company, automatically tracks 500 airplanes daily as they fly the Atlantic and has a "conflict alert" system to warn of potential collisions. A spokesman for Digital Equipment said the problems were caused by the software program provided by a British company, rather than by the computer.

Officials of the Civil Aviation Authority and the Guild of Air Traffic Controllers say that the nine computer failures since March 31 have posed no immediate safety threat for passengers, since the North Atlantic air lanes are not crowded.

But Christopher Tugendhat, chairman of the aviation agency, and Steve Hall, spokesman of the air traffic controllers' guild, are in conflict about how much traffic the Oceanic Air Control Center at Prestwick should handle while the computer malfunction is being investigated.

Mr. Hall wants the aviation agency to institute "flow control," or reduced traffic, throughout the study period, so that fewer planes will be in the air if the computer goes down again and controllers at Prestwick are forced to revert to old-fashioned

Mr. Tugendhat said in an interview on Tuesday that permanent reduction in intercontinental flights is not warranted by the sporadic computer

"If a computer goes down, you have flow control of a rather stringent sort introduced as a consequence of that," Le said. "Our belief is that you should have this system at the ready, not that you have it in permanent operation." He noted that the problem of potential collisions is less pressing in Britain than in the United States.

"In the States, the peak times problem is far worse than it is here," Mr. Tugendhat said. Nonetheless, a recent study by the Royal Air Force Institute of Aviation Medicine has increased worry about collisions and near-collisions of the sort that have dogged U.S. aviation recently. By inviting controllers to file confidential reports, the institute turned up 13 unreported near-collisions, 11 of which were serious enough to have warranted official investigations.

The Civil Aviation Authority is upset by the "hair-raising anonymous reports" and the institute's refusal to provide further details from its confidential records, said Anne Noonan, a press officer at the aviation agency.

Soviet Shuts Part Of Baku Oil Field

MOSCOW - Ninety-three Soriet oil wells from the Baku oil field in the Caspian Sea have been closed after a platform collapsed because of corrosion by the sait water and others began leaning heavily to one side, the Soviet daily Trud reported Tuesday.

The paper did not say when the wells were ordered to close and commented that officials were unable to give a date for their reopening after repairs. The number of offshore oil wells operating in the Baku field was not given.

A technical committee had warned authorities in the Soviet republic of Azerbaidzhan eight years ago that the salt water was corroding the legs of the platforms, which were built in the 1940s, the paper said. The Baku field produces 3 percent of Soviet oil.

To house these giant firms, more than 75 office towers have been built in Manhattan in the last seven years. Dozens of new residential $34,000 each plus a $147-perhigh-rises offer one-bedroom month fee for maintenance and apartments for $2,000 a month. A ripple effect in the boroughs has raised the value of a modest row house in Queens from $35,000 to more than $200,000 in 10 years.

From the 19th floor of a 42d Street skyscraper, Jerry W. Kolb, vice chairman of Deloitta, Haskins & Sells, the nation's sixth largest accounting firm, would seem to be sitting atop the boom.

But he and his 70 partners are moving the headquarters of the 26,000-employee firm, based in New York since 1895, to Connecticut or Westchester County. Only one partner lives in New York City.

"The high cost of housing drives people further and further out of the city," said Mr. Kolb, who lives in Greenwich, Connecticut. "The increasingly long commute makes it difficult for people to be productive and creative. New York is the only major city with a 35-hour standard work week. After we move, our people will work 37-and-a-half or 40 hours." Other aggravations mount.

"You walk out of Grand Central station," he said. "On the south side of the street, you thread your way through garbage pickers. On the north side, you deal with the panhandlers. Soviet to Set Afghan Pullout Deadline

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet deputy foreign minister said Tuesday that a deadline for withdrawal of all Soviet troops from Afghanistan would be determined during the next round of talks in Geneva aimed at negotiating an end to the war.

Igor A. Rogachev made the statement during a Foreign Ministry briefing on international affairs. Mr. Rogachev, an expert on Sovier relations with Asian countries, said the Russian presence in Alghanistan has become less of an obstacle to improved relations with China because of last year's withdrawal of 8,000 Soviet soldiers and the Kremlin's intention "to withdraw completely its troops from there shortly."

No date has been announced for the next round of the United Nationsconsored talks, but they are expected to take place before the end of the year. Soviet officials have repeatedly asserted that Moscow wants to end its involvement in the Afghan civil war. But they have previously tied the schedule for withdrawal to cessation of assistance by Pakistan and the United States to anti-government rebels.

Canadian Rail Strike Enters 2d Day

TORONTO (AP) — The government threatened to intervene and its top mediator brought Canada's striking railroad unions and management together on Tuesday, the second day of a national strike by 48,000 rail workers that stopped freight traffic and created commuter chaos.

The national passenger service, Via Rail, was not a strike target, but all trains were canceled and 4,000 employees were laid off because Via Rail relies on the crews and track of Canadian National and CP Rail, whose employees were on strike. However, delayed passengers were offered air or bus service at no extra cost.

Union officials said negotiators were given two days to resolve the first rail strike in 14 years, after which legislation would be introduced. The strike, which began Monday, was called in a dispute over job security. The government estimated that the strike had stopped 30 percent of Canada's freight shipments, and was costing the railroads about 20 million Canadian dollars ($15 million) a day.

A mix-up in the White House announcement about the Reagan message gave the Sandinists an op-portunity Monday night to jam the proadcast of Radio Liberacion, according to the chief White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater.

Mr. Fitzwater announced during the White House daily briefing on Monday that the president had given the speech. But later, Mr. Fitzwater said he had learned that Mr. Reagan had not given the message

"I got the day wrong and simply made a mistake in amounting it," Mr. Fitzwater said.

Some of the confusion appears to have spilled over to the scheduled meeting in Los Angeles on Thursday between Mr. Reagan and contra leaders.

When the meeting was an-nounced last week, Mr. Fitzwater said it was intended to discuss the pending Central American peace proposal but also was meant as a political signal to those concerned about the fate of the contras.

Marine's 30-Year Sentence for Spying Is Called a 'Public Relations Gesture' jury's recommendation of a 30-year sentence for spying for Sergeant Clayton J. Lonetree, the former embassy security guard in Moscow, was greeted by the lawyer heading the marine's defense as "a public relations gesture because they know the case is so bad."

Michael V. Stuhff, the lead defense counsel, said Monday after the sentencing that the turors could not sit through that trial and not know that there were problems with the government's case."

"Thirty years was as much as they could bring themselves to do," he added. He had predicted a life sentence.

The senience Monday would allow consideration of parole in 10 years. It included a fine of $5,000, the loss of all military pay and allowances, reduction in rank to private and a dishonorable discharge.

Pinochet's Intention to Hold Power Raises Doubts About U.S. Policy

By Bradley Graham schineton Pout Service

SANTIAGO - After encouraging the departure of longtime dictators in Haiti and the Philippines, the Reagan administration is facing a more formidable challenge in seeking to nudge from power President Augusto Pinochet of Chile.

General Pinochet's apparent determination to retain the preside tion next year has raised questions here about the effectiveness of U.S. policy in encouraging the general to leave after 14 years in power.

As Chile nears a political crossroads, moderates on the left are urging Washington to place more those on the right are warning that the more confrontational Washington becomes, the stronger General

Among the factors complicating the Chican case have been the absence of a united democratic oppo-sition as well as General Pinocher's formidable skills as a politician: Even his barshest critics acknowledge that the 71-year-old-general is deft at exploiting the op-position's divisions and cultivating the nationalism and profession loyalty of the military.

in statements last week during a visit to Santiago, Robert Gelbard, deputy assistant U.S. secretary of state for South American affairs, put the United States on record as preferring competitive presidential elections in Chile. But he also backed a planned single-candidate plebiscite provided the vote is held with safeguards against fraud.

Much of Chile's democratic opposition wants the United States to go further and apply economic sanctions. At a minimum, the opposition wants Washington to support the kind of social mobilization and mass demonstrations that undermined Jean-Claude Duvalier in Haiti and Ferdinand E. Marcos in the Philippines last year and forced a democratic opening in South Korea this year. Several bills recently introduced in the U.S. Congress reflect growing concern on Capitol Hill about General Pinochet's intentions and the Reagan administration's measured policy.

U.S. officials still hope that some coalition of center-right opposition groups can entice the armed forces into an agreement on a mutually acceptable civilian candidate for the plebiscite.

Responsibility for picking the nominee rests with the commanders of the armed forces and police.
General Pinochet, who is openly campaigning to be the candidate, announced last week that the plebiscite would be held in "about a year," earlier than the March 1989 constitutional deadline.

The U.S. strategy includes urg-ing the military to break ranks with General Pinochet. To this end, the Reagan administration has declined to vote against international loans to Chile. Sanctions, officials say, would antagonize conservative forces in Chile and arouse nationalist resentment that could serve General Pinochet.

"A certain ambiguity continues to exist in the U.S. approach," said Heraldo Muñoz, a Socialist Party leader who recently completed a book on U.S. Chilean relations. "On the one hand, the United States has become quite critical of the situation in Chile. On the other hand, there are signs of support for that an extension of General Pino-the regime, as in the relatively large chet's presidency could trigger amounts of assistance that contin- greater political polarization, vioue to come from international fi-lence and chaos. nancial institutions to which Amer-

The Reagan administration has endorsed calls for constitutional changes. But Washington's room to maneuver has been stunted by the inability of Chile's splintered democratic opposition to unite around this theme or much else.

There is still a chance that General Pinochet may pull himself out of the running. A commonly discussed scenario suggests that if he fears defeat in the election, General Pinochet may ask to name another candidate and keep his title as head of the armed forces.

Hard Times Approach

"U.S. Trade Gap in June Grew to $15.71 Billion." Like Beirut car bombings and defense contract overruns, big trade deficits have become routine. The bad news hardly registers in America, even when the dollar takes a nasty drop. The latest figures are nonetheless stark. Unless America's biggest trading partners stimulate demand at home. a worldwide recession will be hard to avoid.

Why do U.S. trade deficits persist despite a 30 percent drop in the dollar in two years? Japanese and European exporters have trimmed profits rather than accept lower sales volumes. A glut in world production has prevented a rebound in U.S. grain exports. Heavy Latin American debt has forced Brazil and Mexico, two of the best

U.S. customers, to cut back on purchases. The most important reason, though, and the one that looks easiest to correct, is the global imbalance in economic demand.

The U.S. economy is chugging along; nemployment has dropped below 6 percent for the first time since 1980. Japan's, by contrast, seems stalled on the tracks. Its growth rate is an anemic (for Japan) 3 percent, and unemployment approaches a record (for Japan) high of 3 percent. The world's other big economic player, West Germany, is in even worse shape, with less than 2 percent growth forecast and with 9 percent unemployment. As a result, there has been little increase in foreign demand for competitively priced American products. In June, U.S. imports rose by 5.8 percent while exports were up just 1.6 percent.

In Both Tokyo and Bonn, tepid domestic growth and the resulting widening of the trade gap evoke official dismay. But both governments are obsessed by the fear of inflation, and neither is prepared to challenge conventional conservative wisdom. Japan is dawdling on its reluctant commitment to stimulate its economy modestly.
West Germany refuses outright to do its part as a locomotive for the world economy.

In theory, America can go on importing, almost twice as much as it exports as long as foreign investors are willing to plow back their surplus dollar earnings - and as long as Congress resists tough import barriers. But eventually, unless the trade deficit narrows, foreign investors will get cold feet and the dollar will take another plunge.

Then the sputtering Japanese and West German economies, so dependent on export markets, will run out of gas entirely. Few economists believe that the U.S. Federal Reserve will at that point be able to find a path between inflation and recession.

There are many ways for politically weak governments in Japan and West Germany to rationalize their passivity. At the moment, they can rightly denounce America's unwillingness to face up to its budget deficits. But rationalizations will provide little comfort when the market for all those cars and cameras and machine tools takes a tumble. Burdened by leaders lacking the vision and political courage to coordinate policies, the world economy drifts toward hard times.

A Challenge for Duarte

in a deceptively advantageous place. The plan was designed to deal with Nicaragua. and being drawn by governments, it favors the Sandinists: It ends foreign support of local guerrillas and opens the political system only to "unarmed internal political opposition groups." These terms led a wary Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega to accept a commitment to conciliation and democratic reform. The same terms led an exuberant Salvadoran President José Napoleón Duarte to embrace the Arias plan. El Salvador, an imperfect but striving democracy, can live with the Arias goal of democracy far more easily and credibly than Nicaragua can. And in putting an international stamp on delegitimizing guerrillas, the Arias plan handed President Duarte a major boon.

So it appears that El Salvador is in a nolose situation. If the Salvadoran guerrillas endorse the Arias rules, halt their cruel economic sabotage and their military raids and join the legal political process, the Duarte forces will have a triumph. This result would also give something to those on the left who believe in democracy and re-

The Arias peace plan leaves El Salvador form, not just in destruction and revolution. But if the guerrillas reject the Arias plan and they largely have — they will suffer isolation. Especially will this be so if the Sandinists make good on their pledge to cut off support for the Salvadoran insurgents, who are a good deal less needful of outside maintenance than the Nicaraguan contras but still take some Sandinist aid. Let there be no premature celebration for President Duarte, however. For all of the advantages he can extract from the Arias plan, the Salvadoran guerrillas retain an independent war-making capability, a political constituency and a territorial base. A plan that offers them less than what they were trying to get from their earlier unproductive "dialogue" with President Duarte is unlikely to stop the war. The formal terms of the Arias plan, drawn with Nicaragua first in mind, need to be adapted to Salvadoran circumstances, something that lingering feudal elements in El Salvador resist. In short, President Duarte has a promising agreement to work with, but he has his work cut cut for him, too.

One Marine in Moscow

With the sentencing of Sergeant Clayton Lonetree to 30 years' imprisonment, a major phase of the Moscow marine scandal has come to an end. From the beginning, Sergeant Lonetree was the key figure. His guilt has now been established. His offenses are serious. A member of an elite unit, the embassy guard was the first marine in the the come to be tried espionage. Now a military jury has found him guilty of acts that he first confessed last December: He had an affair with a Soviet agent and under her influence gave to the KGB photographs of U.S. intelligence agents, embassy floor plans and more than 100 classified documents. In exchange, he received money from the Soviets.

Disgraceful as this case is, six months ago it appeared to be much worse. Four Marine Corps guards had been implicated, the entire Moscow guard contingent of 28 young men had been returned to Washington and charges were being made that the physical security of the embassy had been breached. But this was not proved. No evidence was produced that substantiated the tale of guards letting KGB agents into the building at night, guiding them to offices and code rooms and standing by while bugs were placed and secret material compromised. Charges against one marine, Corporal Arnold Bracy, have been dropped. Those against Sergeants Robert Stufflebeam and Kenneth Kelliher relate to contacts with Soviet women but not to espionage.

ain concern tigation, which was conducted by a civilian arm of the navy. In what circumstances, for example, did both Sergeant Lonetree and Corporal Bracy confess to letting the Soviets into the embassy? Did iustifiable concern about embassy security in Moscow - compounded by revelations about bugs in the new building under construction - lead to unreasonable pressures and unfounded charges in the case of some marines? The involvement of Sergeant Lonetree, who turned himself in and confessed to numerous acts of espionage. has been fairly clear all along. But unless new evidence is forthcoming, it appears that serious criminal conduct by the marine guards was not widespread.

More Challenges to Glasnost

Several thousand nationalist demonstrators gathered [last] weekend in the capitals of the three Baltic states - Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania - to mark the 48th anniversary of the Nazi-Soviet pact which led to their forced incorporation into the Soviet Union. These events are the latest in a series of challenges to the logic of glasnost and they have much in common with the earlier demonstrations in Moscow by Crimean Tatars seeking a return to their traditional homeland. As well as seeking some degree of national independence, the crowds in Vilnius, the capital of Lithuania, called for freedom for the Roman Catholic Church and for publication of the secret protocols of the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact which partitioned great parts of Eastern Europe between Germany and the Soviet Union. By now the broad truth about the gulag, the purges of "innocent" party and military leaders, the collaboration with Hitler and the fact that entire minority groups were repressed is relatively widely known. The Russian people would survive the shock of a little historic glasnost. But admitting an appalling past to the Russian people means admitting it to the Baltic peoples, to the Tatars, to the Kazakhs and, ndeed, to the Ukrainians and the Georgians, and that would challenge the very egitimacy of the Russian empire. For it would involve admitting that Russia has long been an opportunistic expansionist power which acquired its fringe states and its national minorities by force of arms and governs them against their will. The Onus Remains on Syria

After nearly 10 months of isolation, Syria seems to be edging its way out of international quarantine. But a degree of caution is in order, since President Assed has yet to prove that he can deliver on any of the issues with which he is promising to help the West, particularly in regard to his relationship with Iran. The onus is on Syria to earn a full return to favor by proving that it can turn its leverage over Iran

Prosperity Makes Democracy Inescapable

By John Kenneth Galbraith

C AMBRIDGE, Massachusetts — There have been few times in history when the word "democracy exceptional. Here there is the mili- ished but, if circumstances required has been so persistently, even extravagantly, a subject of public reference strongman or a permanently domias in these last months. This we have seen in recent decades and most recently in the Philippines and South Korea. And we also now

mand by the people to participate or, threaten dangerously our ears.

Certainly we have been left in no doubt as to the virtues of this design for government, even in the rather flexible form avowed in the Irancontra hearings. And here is the problem: We have heard too much of the virtues of democracy — a matter of which, generally speaking, we are aware. We have heard too little of its aware. We have heard 100 man or practical utility, and, more especially, practical utility, and more especially, iven the relevant circumstances, its historical inevitability.

nel Oliver North have combined to

This failure to recognize the utility and inevitability of democracy is, in turn, the source of one of the most serious — perhaps the most serious — errors in American foreign policy. The broad and wholly visible circumstance is that there can be and are dictatorships in primitive tribal or landlord-dominated agricultural societies, and perhaps for a while in the early stages of industrial develop-ment, or in times of economic regression and hardship, as in Germany and Italy in the 1930s. People who are subject in their daily lives to the personal authority or economic power of tribal leaders, large landowners or primal capitalists, or to the weight of economic depression, are not especially sensitive to the authority of some civilian or military dietator or junta in the often remote capital. Their freedom of expression is sufficiently circumscribed by the local talent, as also by poverty and an all-embracing struggle to survive. Mass illiteracy also contributes greatly to political docility.

All of this changes with economic and industrial development. The con-trolling circumstance then is simply that a very large number of people, individually and in organizations, insist on being heard. Poverty and igno-rance have sufficiently released their grip so as to allow the luxury — in fact, the imperative — of self-expression.

Diverse business interests, trade unions, professional groups, farm organizations, university students and faculty, journalists, publicists, religious leaders, self-motivated custodians of the public interest — the list can be extended almost indefinitely - all wish to have a voice in the way they are governed, and not less in the way others are governed.

The same attitudes that have defeated the exercise of external imperial power in this century resist the unli-censed exercise of authority within the country. The only way so far discov-ered for allowing this expression and according it some real or imagined effect is some form of participatory democracy - some form of participation in the act of government. Democracy is not, as we regularly suggest, a fragile thing; in the absence of any workable alternative, it is inevitable.

All of this could seem theoretical. abstract, were it not so powerfully affirmed in practice. There is ro advanced industrial country outside the socialist world that does not have, in one form-or another, a democratically oriented government. So it is in the United States and Canada, in Japan, Australia, New Zealand, India (now an emergent industrial power), Brazil, Argentina and Mexico, in Israel and in all of Western Europe without exception. In the nonindustrial world, on the

the Philippines and South Korea. So it will be in the future in Taiwan, Chile. Pakistan Indonesia and eventually in South Africa and in the Arab world. We cannot assume that any modern state can resist the insistent will of its people to be heard and to participate. Dictatorships, alas, may well continue in the poorest lands; elsewhere they are a passing phase. As a matter of current practical relevance, the United States cannot install democracy in Latin America. With economic development, however, it will surely come. I do not suggest that with industrial development the transition to de-mocracy will always be smooth. Reinto full flame in the aftermath. This anti-Americanism is the present experience in the Philippines and especially in South Korea, as it continues to be in Iran.

More particularly, when Americans align themselves with dictators and against history, the legacy will be a strong perhaps even a politically decisive anti-Americanism. Suppressed during the dictatorship, it will burst into full florus in the aftermath.

And we have seen a further and even more extreme response. If the United States supports dictators, then the Soviet Union and socialism must be right. This was the reaction in Cuba after Fulgencio Batista and in Nicaragua after Anastasio So-moza Debayle. Moral misjudgments can presumably be forgiven; forthright conflict with history has deeper and more enduring effects.

Thus, the conclusion. Let us follow the americal low the practical course. Let us look beyond the current outburst of rhetoric on democracy to the reality. That reality is the absence in the modern industrial country of any enduring alternative to democracy. Accordingly, let us cesse linking ourselves to obsolescent forms of government, especially in those countries that are now crossing over into modern economic life. Let us, if reluctantly, face this grim fact: Those who resist embracing dictators, however impracticable may seem their susceptibility to moral judgments, are historically right.

Korea's Labor Unrest Has Deep Roots

WASHINGTON — The surge of worker discontent in South Korea stems from economic dissatisfaction but also from a complex set of cultural and political reasons.

In a Confucian society, benevolence and trust — not contracts — are the basis of human relations. Thus labor unionization, which assumes legal and often adversarial relationships between workers and management, began as a rather foreign concept. Anti-communist impulses stem-ming from Cold War politics during the 1940s combined with the cultural resistance to further hamper labor unions. The American military command, which ruled South Korea from 1945 to 1948, cracked down on nascent, worker-initiated unions as part of an anti-leftist campaign. In their al Labor Federation, singularly com-mitted to anti-communism. So labor unions began with a bad limp.

Weak unions, however, do not nec-essarily mean unrestrained exploitation of the workers. Japanese workers have flourished despite insipid unions. Experts cite cheap labor as an indispensable ingredient of South Korea's model of economic growth through exports. But the predicament of the country's workers is not attributable solely to the imperatives of an exportpriented developmental strategy.

Korean financial conglomerates had to rely largely on government loans or the allocation of U.S. aid dollars for start-up and operating cap-ital. They thus fell easy prey to government manipulation, as evidenced by the sudden and inexplicable rise and demise of many conglomerates. Precarious existence breeds an unhealthy appetite and an unsharing attitude. Korea's feudal tradition also undermined the notion of reciprocity between labor and management based on moral obligations — an intrinsical-Confucian norm for which Japan is best known. In feudal times, the lord's benevolence and generosity were re-paid with the subjects' loyalty and discipline. In modern labor-management relations, contracts and unions would become perfunctory because high worker productivity and loyalty would be rewarded with generous benefits and job security irrespective of contract or unions. But Korean tradition was that of a strong central power, which made ruler-subject relationships highly one-sided. Spontaneous reciprocity never took root.

Export industries were initially neithat diversified nor technologically advanced, and textile and light consumer goods made up the bulk of exports. Thus the raising of wages would not have expended the domestic market for these industries, because their products were beyond the level of domestic consumption. Industrialists therefore held the wages down and used the increasing profit to expand and diversify production. If these are some of the major reasons for the lowly existence of the Korean workers, they are not the only issues that have to be addressed in resolving the labor unrest. Female workers and professionals are forced to resign on marriage. Most young women in manufacturing live in dormitories and net less than $100 monthly while working more than 200 hours. Also, although workers are the largest group in society, they have never had political representation. They have human needs and wants beyond higher wages and agreeable working conditions. They need an institutional forum to articulate and press for their human interests.

Better wages and limited unionization, therefore, will not provide an enduring solution to the labor unrest.
The case in point is Hyundai, the country's largest conglomerate, which was pressured by the government to permit the organization of Hyundai unions. Because work-site unions are vulnerable to management manipulation and control, this is a limited, albeit welcome, development. Obviously the government must do more than posture as a mediator between labor and management. It has to strive for a fundamental solution including legislation providing equal and fair treatment of female workers, improvement of rules and regulations regarding work safety, restoration of workers' collective rights, and the right to organize industry-wide unions.

Otherwise labor unrest will recur or persist, thereby endangering the future of South Korean democracy.

we meditated on the powerful parable, in Matthew 13: 24-43, of a man who sowed weeds among the wheat. In 1979, the Nicaraguan people - all sectors of the population - sowed the good seed, full of hope and expectations. Unfortunately, we who favor democracy fell asleep and the enemy came and sowed the weeds in the fields of Nicaragua. In the parable, the wheat will be harvested and gathered into the barn, while the weeds will be tied in bundles to be burned. I do not intend trying to establish a perfect parallel between Jesus's parable and our situation in Nicaragua, but there is no doubt that our enemy is real, and that the weeds are trying to choke the wheat. Moreover, in the international market of ideas, the weeds are being sold under the guise of wheat,

The Central American peace plan, signed on Aug. 7 in Guatemala, offers us the opportunity of again sowing good seed in Nicaragua. We all believe that there must be good will when an agreement of such magnitude has been signed. After having lived through the first experience, however, we know that it is our duty not to fall asleep, but to keep watch and prevent the enemy from frustrating our people's longing for peace and freedom. We need a minimum of assurance that what was taken from us will not again be stolen.

I ask that, before Nov. 7, the deadline set by the accord for Nicaragus to lift its five-year state of emergency, the Sandinists restore the right of being able to live in one's country, and other natural rights inherent in the people. I call for the respect of church rights in Nicaragua, including the right to The degradation of labor is inex- own and use the means for mass: tricably linked to the discrimination communication. expelled priests, including myself. When the Sandinists have provided the necessary guarantees, I invite Nicaraguan exiles to form a group willing to return to test the good will of the Sandinists. Our American friends can help provide the assurances we need. They must not assume the good will of the Sandinists. They must expect deeds, not simply words. They must not neglect Central American events in order to direct their attention to news in other parts of the world.

On Aug. 15, a few Nicaraguans went in good faith to make sure that they could use their legitimate rights. The protest march was repressed by Sandinist police equipped with electric prods and using trained dogs. Lino Hernández, the director of the Permanent Commission on Human Rights, and Alberto Saborillo, a leader of the Conservative Party, were jailed. These men are not terrorists; they are honorable citizens, respected internationally, and they were sentenced, without trial, to 30 days in prison for making use of their constitutional rights. The churches, labor unions, human rights groups and media must not abandon the people of Nicaragua who have democratic ideals. They must not be indifferent when individuals such as Mr. Hernandez act to make use of their legitimate rights.

BELGRADE - Late this evening [Aug. 25] a meeting was improvised by students before the University. The orators protested against the nassivity of the Servian Government and proposed the formation of a Coalition Cabinet for the purpose of protecting the Servian population in the vilayet of Kossovo - even at the cost of war. A large crowd gathered and made a demonstration. About six thousand people paraded before the King's Palace and the Foreign Office, but, nobody appearing, the crowd dispersed. FRANCO-SPANISH FRONTIER -Santander surrendered this afternoon [Aug. 25] as the result of a revolt of a portion of the civil population, aided by the police and Civil Guards, against the governmental authorities, according to wireless reports from Salamanca. These reports stated that the surrender of the city was preceded by street lighting, which ended with the insurrectionists seizing control of the city. Nationalist troops are expected to enter tomorrow. "While the government army was hastening to retreat, last-minute sympathizers within the capital sezzed the govern-ment building aided by Civil Guards, without bloodshed, to prevent the extremists from destroying the city," the Salamanca radio stated. "Four columns of our troops are now approaching the capital ... Santander is entirely in our hands."

"Spycatcher," by a former member of the British Secret Service, deals with events mostly decades old, but shows how British intelligence tracks and sometimes tries to manipulate elected officials. It owes its bestsellerdom entirely to Margaret Thatcher's dogged efforts to suppress it.
This is the same kind of chummy col-

Mr. Evans, then editor of The Sunday Times and now editor of the American magazine Traveler, fought vainly in the British courts. Finally the European Court of Human Rights upheld him, and British readers learned what had happened to pregnant women who had swallowed the tranquilizer called thalidomide. It took 10 years. Some years ago I was talking at dinner to Sir Robert Marks, then head of Scotland Yard, on the importance of guaranteeing press rights against censorship. Sir Robert looked at me coolly and said: "Sometimes I think it is a pity Americans and Britons speak the same language. It leads us to the erroneous assumption that we share the same ideas and artitudes." So I was all prepared to commit a column about how, in the United States, neither the "Spycatcher" nor the thalidomide cases could happen. Then I read details of the latest American censorship drive, backed by the full might and glory of the government of the United States. It is against obscenity and pornography. But the Department of Justice has created the magnificently named National Obscenity Enforcement Unit to help sure and legal hocus pocus into play. Federal officials say fighting obscenity is a national priority, which should suit drug runners just fine. This is not to sneer at people disgusted by sexual explicitness, but it has to be recognized that not every-body is disgusted, otherwise the vast por-nography industry would not exist.

The question, then, is, Should satisfy-

Observations on Glasnost, as Seen Through Other Eyes

Regarding the opinion column "Look-g for Glasnost on the Scene" (Meaning for Glasnost on the Scene (while, Aug. 11) by Stephen Williams:
I was in the Soviet Union at the same time as Mr. Williams, but I have been going there regularly since 1969, speak the language fluently (I am a free-lance translator), and have many friends there. After I read his article, I tried to picture what my impressions would be if I were American and going there for the first time this year. That was rather easy for me to do because I had met several Americans who happened to be on their first visit. The basic difference between them and Mr. Williams was that, from the moment they arrived in the Soviet Union, they looked for friends to guide them in a country where the language is a barrier and the customs so different. And they succeeded in perceiving what is obvious to me: that something new really is taking place there. First, let's take the way the Russians dress, which is infinitely better than most Americans. They have teste and manage, with what they find in the stores and on the black market, to have a perfectly decent appearance. Conservative, certainly. But jeans are common, and so are shirts. They were not a few years back. The government-controlled press has

When newlyweds lay the bride's bou-quet on the grave of the Unknown Sollong decried the laggardness of the condier, it is homage paid to the victims of a war that affected every family in the struction industry. So no one is surprised at seeing weedy-looking backyards in Moscow and Leningrad. They are still cleaner than those in the Bronx, and less country. Patriotism in Russia has the same color as in America: the people are proud of their country, its history and its victories, and proclaim it loudly. dangerous. "Good Evening, Moscow," the popular live television program on every evening between 7 and 8. takes I should add, from my own experience, questions from the audience on this conthat there is a real effort to uproot alcoroversial topic and many others.

Mr. Williams's one venture off the tourist circuit did not take him to many holism, and to apply "efficiency" (the word does not exist in Russian) at the workplace. It will take time but at least markets, obviously. There were lots of people are asked to compare their methfresh vegetables and greens, plenty of fruit, and I even saw wild strawberries ods with what is being done abroad, and that was taboo until last year. being sold by the glass. The real problem: Hotel security brings me to what struck me most this visit: the paradox in which Soviet society now lives. Some hotels let you in without any controls, others will not even let in foreigners from other hotels. There is no rule. You have to give it a try and see what the reaction is.

And this is truly where glasnost is hiding these days: Some things which were very reprehensible a while ago are delking graveyard without any problem.

And when the guide tells you it's difficult to get there, she is just being lazy.

The only requirement: that you not go more than 40 kilometers (25 miles) outside the city on your own. You have to ask the guide, and if she is not too lazy, a considerable number of rays. Not enough to brighten up the scene com-pletely, but enough to feel better as you eft your Russian friends behind, know ing that, now, they might be facing their future instead of surviving the war. NATHALIE NOVIK.

It is a sad reality that, apart from the many "official" barriers imposed on tour-ists in the Soviet Union, the only Englishspeaking Russians one is likely to encounter are Intourist guides, usually purveyors of the strictest dogma, or black market traders whose interest in discussion is limited to Levi jeans and Swatch watches. Thus, observation becomes the sole means of evaluating the Soviet Union and the effects of glasmost.

If the visitor lacks knowledge of Russian, observation degenerates into com-parison — not of abstractions such as political systems or personal freedoms But do these comparisons truly address the issue of glasnost in its admittedly infant stage? Moscow today may not re-semble Prague in 1968, but it would be shortsighted not to see the changes taking place. Spring is always preceded by a slow winter thaw, however imperceptible.

Princeton: A Toothless Tiger Is Shot Down in Academia

I do this to indulge an animosity that began when I entered Columbia University in 1940 and thereupon inherited a vendeua. In 1804, Aaron Burr (Princeion) killed Alexander Hamilton (Columbia) in a duel; certain subsequent sports results, especially a basketball game in 1948, helped keep my indignation fresh. And while Columbia alumni take vicarious pride in the attention being paid to Hamilton during the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution, to whose adoption he contributed so much, we also don't hesitate to remind Princetonians that Burr wound up being tried for trea-son (but was acquitted, I admit).

Now, Life magazine, in its current issue, reproduces, with her permission and comment, the four-year academic transcript of Brooke Shields, the actress, who was graduated in June. The record itself reflects nothing but credit on the young lady. She got all As and Bs, and obviously paid attention to her school work. The criticism that follows is not directed at her, nor intends to suggest that there is anything wrong with the courses she took, her spheres of interest or the academic quality of the courses she did take.

What caught my attention was the totality of her program: that is, what it takes to get a Princeton degree these days. Princeton has always presented itself as the purveyor of a superior traditional liberal arts education, producing well-rounded minds stocked with the basics of Western culture. Like Harvard and Yale, the only two institutions Princetonians consider their social equals (although Harvard people have great reservations about the upstarts from New Jersey), Princeton is supposed to provide no mere "college education," honorable as that is in itself. It is supposed to aspire to a level of intellectual and cultural breadth exceptional in America and suitable for an especially favored elite of true "gentlemen" (and, since going coed, "gentle-women" in the best sense). This is the image projected. We Columbia people may have our opinions about how individual Princetonians live up to such claims, and may know from experience that their interest in their eating clubs, squash courts, genteel ca-rousing and social contacts often ex-thorough education. Until now. Brooke Shields majored in French, In four years, she took 116 credits (hours) and received another 16 hours of credit for individual work in her junior and senior years. To put it another way, she took 30 one-semester courses. She took four courses in French language and five in French literature, plus three courses in acting, three in cinema analysis, one in dance, one in contemporary English drama. Together, these courses accounted for 59 percent of her classroom hours

She took three semesters of ceramics 10 percent of her classroom time). She took three courses in psychology: introductory, abnormal and Theories of Psychotherapy" (10 percent). She had two other English courses: "Women and the Novel" and "Victorian Children's Literature" (7 percent). The other courses, one semester each, were "Philosophy and the Modern Mind," "Comparative Family Systems," "The Self in World Religions" and "History of Earth and Life" (geology).

I don't doubt that the content of each course was excellent. But if that adds up to a liberal aris education from a place like Princeton, there is no longer any danger that our society will ever suffer from elitism in any form.

That education apparently contained no courses in classical studies (history, philosophy, literature of the ancient world), medieval history, modern history or U.S. history; no hard science requiring any kind of lab; no math; no anthropology: no economics; no political science or government; no basic sociology; no world literature; no American literature; no survey of Third World cultures; no geography; not even computer literacy.
That's no fault of hers; by my lights,

Miss Shields was cheated. Princeton's motto, "Dei sub numine ignet," translates from the Latin as: "Under God's guidance, it flourishes," with the "it" referring to Princeton. My freer translation is: "Boy, have we got good networking!" But it is the word "flourish" that now is in question, and if a program that light, and that loose, can lead to a degree at Princeton, what possible excuse can there be for a continuation of inferior football teams in Palmer Stadium?

In Spain, Real Estate Swindles Cloud Foreigners' Dreams for Retirement

CALPE, Spain - Last summer, Bill and Doreen Langford sold their house in England to move into a retirement house they paid $66,000 to build near this village on the eastern Mediterranean coast.

But when they arrived, their dream house did not exist. The Langfords found a half-fimished foundation and a hole in the ground where their swimming pool prospective buyers to be sure that they understand Spanish real estate laws. And the Spanish government, facing pressure from the European Parliament and aware of growing foreign investments, is taking action against local and foreign swindlers who have been wheeling and dealing for years.

Most foreigners who buy houses in Spain get legitimate deals and settle down to a comfortable life. But some of the estimated one million Britons, West Germans and other northern Europeans who have flocked to Spain have faced unpleasant surprises.

On the Right Bank, where we worked, cozy bistros were scarce, especially in the high-rent district near the Herald's Rue de Berni building. Usually we were able to fix things for him with the po-lice. The Onyx Bar actually had an onyx slab (hence its name) but we pretended to believe that the proprietor was Monsieur Onyx until Tom Marvel came up with the logical explanation that the bistro was named Onyx because it was so "onyxpected" to find it in the area.

In addition to the increasingly powerful Guards, Iran has been oranized into komitehs, or revoluionary committees, that enforce the new rule in the streets.

The komitchs have formed around mosques or mullahs, but Iranians said they perform roughly the same functions as neighbor hood Sandinist Defense Committees in Nicaragua or Revolutionary Defense Committees in Cuba.

Tehran residents go to their local komitchs to get ration cards for sugar or meat, for example, and komitch leaders make sure the masses turn out for demonstrations when the Islamic leadership puts out the call.

"Before the revolution, people drank outside their homes and prayed inside," goes a joke. "Now they pray outside their homes and drink inside."

The changes have been serious as well, however, and they have raised strong doubts in the minds of many Iranians, particularly as the war with Iraq drags on.

Syria Reports Firing Missiles At 2 Warplanes

BEIRUT - A senior Syrian officer said Tuesday that Syrian air defenses had fired surface-to-air missiles at two warplanes.

"Our forces fired two missiles on two enemy warplanes that attempted to violate our country's airspace," the officer said in the vil-lage of Rashaya Al Wadi, 22 miles (35 kilometers) north of Israel.

The officer requested anonymity and refused to say where the missiles were fired. Witnesses said Monday that Syrian troops along the Syrian-Leba-nese border fired two Soviet-made heat-seeking SAM-6 missiles at two U.S-made F-16 Israeli planes as they approached the Syrian border near Al Wadi, four miles west of the Syrian border. Israeli officials have not comnented on the incident, the first of its kind since the Israelis and the

■ Saudi Aide Accuses Iran

Edward Cody of The Washington Post reported from Jeddah: Prince Nayef ion Abdel Aziz, the Saudi interior minister, said Tuesday that Iran fomented last month's rioting at Mecca to destabilize Saudi Arabia and make the kingdom appear unfit to rule over Islam's holy shrines. With the pilgrimage officially over, Saudi authorities invited more than 100 reporters to Jeddah to hear Prince Nayef's presentation. It was an unusual display of concern for world public opinion by a kingdom that traditionally has made discretion a trademark. Prince Nayef, who is Fahd's brother, said the Iranian demonstrators at Mecca were part of a plot" organized by Ayatollah Khomeini's government to discredit Saudi control over the holy sites. Iranian authorities sought to

Arab League Pressures Iran on UN Truce Effort

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches TUNIS - Arab League foreign ministers agreed Tuesday at a special meeting to reconsider the sta-tus of their diplomatic ties with Iran if the country does not accept the United Nations call for a cease-fire in the Gulf War by Sept. 20. Chedli Klibi, secretary-general of the 21-member league, said a break in relations between Iran and Arab states could not be ruled out if Tehran did not respond. Two Arab League members, Tunisia and Mauritania, have already severed ties with Iran.

The resolution that the ministers dopted, backed by Syria, Algeria, Oman and the United Arab Emirates and prepared by a committee that included Mr. Klibi, was a watered-down version of a measure urged by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait that would have demanded an immediate break with Iran and threatened sanctions. Mr. Klibi said the ministers decided to allow Tehran to reconsider its apparent rejection of the UN Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire.

He said the Sept. 20 deadline coincided with the annual session of the UN General Assembly, by which time the UN secretary-general, Javier Perez de Cuellar, is expected to have completed consultations with Iran.

The story of Johnson's rise and fall in the years surrounding World War I is seen through the racial perspective of the 1960s; the central issue here is how the white community in the United States and even abroad reacted with horror and then revenge to the idea that a black could beat the hell out of a boxer from a supposedly supe-

When Johnson came to London in 1911, only a few months after his victory but already at the start of an increasingly disastrous exile, the chairman of the local boxing authority declared that "the sight of a black man pounding a white man is far from attractive and cannot be considered public entertainment." At home his championship was regarded as little short of an incitement to black rebellion, hence the frantic search for a "great white hope" to take the title back. Sackler tells us that tale in the manner of a historical pageant, telescoping Johnson's private life into encounters with one angry black mistress (Valerie Buchanan and one spicidal white woman (Jill Baker) while allowing us to hear from various white promoters and FBI agents the fears caused by Johnson's refusal to toe any marital or social lines that might have made him acceptable to the whites. across state borders were soon trumped up, and the champion was rapidly made over into a criminal ontcast, one who lived on until 1946 but largely as a vaudeville

We are however never allowed to know what Johnson himself thought of his treatment, never given any real insight into an evidently complex and self-destructive figure. Just as the only fight we ever see is Johnson's fight for survival. For all that, the "Great White Hope" now joins "They Shoot Horses, Don't They!" as a welcome addition to what should perhaps be known as the RSC's anti-American season at the Mermaid.

Elsewhere, it is proving an artistic summer for the Landon theater. Last week, a life of Augustus John; this week, William Hogarth, In the Barbican Pit from Stratford, Nick Dear's "The Art of Success" has already attracted a certain amount of critical flak for its portrait of Hogarth as an 18th century timeriogaria as an ioin cantify time-serving, money-grubbing hack in-stead of a great radical social com-mentator. By William Weaver D ESARO, Italy - The growing - and well-deserved -- success of the Rossini Opera Festival here in the composer's birthplace makes almost everything that is presented an automatic news event as well as a cultural occasion.

For the opening last weeker "Ermione," last staged in 1819, the capacity audience included not only critics and musicologists from all over the world, but also a sizable representation from Italian indusally less than heroic — spend much of their time warding off unwanted try. finance, politics, and films. Television cameras rolled both inside and outside the lovely Teatro Rossini (this year, blissfully cooled). Tickets were priced at a stiff 250,000 lire (about $190), but none had been available for the casting, which supported Ca-balle with Marilyn Horne, Chris

Despite its long absence from the stage, "Ermione" was not entirely unknown. A concert performance in Siena 10 years ago, though barely adequate, had given some idea of the opera's qualities, and a later concert performance led to a premiere recording and further acquaintance. Still, some music lovers in the Pesaro audience - after the dazzling "Viaggio a Reims" of two years ago and the dramatically in-tense "Bianca e Faliero" last year - may have been surprised and even a bit put off by the cool aus-terity of "Ermione," derived from Racine's tragedy "Andromaque" and with some of its olympian ele-

Enthusiasm, however, was not lacking, and there were long ovations after many individual arias.

Adventures in Advertising: Pop-Ups to Jingles to 3-D

By BRUCE HOROVITZ

OS ANGELES - When Transamerica Corp. insurance agents hand their business cards to clients later this month, a curious thing will happen. A miniature pyramid will pop out of the fold-up business cards. To be precise, a three-dimensional cutout of San Francisco's wellknown Transamerica pyramid building will emerge.

This follows the company's highly successful advertising campaign that appeared as a pop-up ad in Time magazine last September. That $3 million advertising insert featured a 9-inch (23-centimeter) pop-up picture of the building — and the rest of the San Francisco skyline. The pyramid on the look-alike card will be about 2 inch-

New wrinkles in print advertising are influencing companies to do far more than change their calling cards. Companies, once fascinated by the power of television to introduce new products or shape corporate images, are experimenting with new printing techniques now available in magazines. In the process, they are changing the way ads feel, smell, and even the way they sound.

When readers of the New Yorker and New York magazines. open their December issues, they will be greeted by "singing" centerfold ads for Absolut vodka. These ads, with the aid of a special microchip, play such seasonal tunes as "Jingle Bells," "We Wish You a Merry Christmas" and "Frosty the Snowman." The microchip - powered by a tiny battery - will automatically play when readers turn to the centerfold ad.

"Can you imagine being on an airplane when 30 people all open their copies of these magazines?" posed John B. Caldwell Jr., senior vice president of marketing for the New York-based Magazine Publishers Association.

B UT THAT is not the print industry's only song. Holograms — which produce three-dimensional images — will premiere in magazine advertising next year. At least four major advertisers plan to use holograms to sell their messages in magazines. "The public is bored with standard print advertising." said Lee Lacey, founder and chief executive of Holo-Source Corp., a Southfield, Michigan, company that specializes in holo-

Last month, Mr. Lacey's company designed a hologram ad that features the new Lincoln Mercury car, the Merkur Scorpio. The laser photograph is printed on 175,000 cards mailed mostly to owners of expensive sport cars.

More pop-up ads are on the way, according to Waldo Hunt, chairman and chief executive of Intervisual Communications Inc., the Los Angeles company that created the Transamerica ad, but similar ads for Honeywell Inc. and Chrysler Corp.'s Dodge division. His company is creating two more pop-up ads — one that will run in October for a major bank and another scheduled for a Christmas release by a major liquor maker.

But Mr. Hunt, whose company also makes pop-up children's books, thinks that the big future for pop-up ads might not be in consumer magazines, but in business-to-business advertising in trade publications. "That's where an advertiser who wants to introduce something special can really dominate a publication,"

These ad innovations are not happening by accident. Magazines read by the general public have suffered a two-year slide in the number of advertising pages sold, said Mr. Caldwell of the Magazine Publishers Association. And in the first half of 1987, the number of magazine ad pages sold nudged up less than I percent, he said.

But new methods of innovative print advertising may help See POP-UP, Page 13

£5 Billion for Channel Project

The Associated Press

LONDON — Enrotunnel an-nounced Tuesday that a group of 50 banks had committed itself to a £5 billion ($8.1 billion) loan to the British-French consortium to part-ly finance the planned rail tunnel under the English Channel.

The loan was announced months ago but the last of the banks finally committed themselves this week the British co-chairman of the project, Alastair Morton, said at a Dews conference.

Eurotunnel is a consortium of construction companies and banks building the tunnel, on which construction has begun.

Euronomei will not be able to draw on its credit until after completion of a £750 million share issue scheduled for November.

Lead managers of the loan are Banque Indosuez, Banque Nationale de Paris, Crèdit Lyonnais, Midland Bank PLC and National Westminster Bank PLC. The lead banks are each committing £170

Within the past two weeks, Britain's other major banks have decided to join the syndication, Mr. Morton said. Barelays Bank PLC and Lloyds Bank PLC committed £128 million each and Standard Chartered PLC £60 million.

Crédit National, a French gov-ernment-owned long-term indus-trial investment bank, has joined and is underwriting £60 million.

French and British banks account for about 15 percent each of the syndication, Japanese banks a little over 25 percent, West German banks about 12 percent, North American banks about 7 percent and Arab banks about 5 percent.

The £5 billion loan is an 18-year credit with an interest rate of 1 to 1% percentage point over the Lon-don interbank offered rate, which now stands at between 7 1/16 and

Mr. Morton said Eurotunnel would seek to refinance the loan within two years of the tunnel's planned opening in 1993.

South Africa Held by Chains of Gold

State's Power and Identity Is Linked to Mining Resources

By Mark A. Uhlig New York Times Service NEW YORK — By withhold-ing their labor from South Africa's gold and coal mines, members of the National Union Mineworkers have focused their strength on the resources that have largely defined South Africa's place as a modern industrial

But the importance of minerals, especially gold, to South Africa's economic system also makes the strike dangerous, a consider-ation underscored by dozens of mine strikes the government has harshly suppressed during the last

South Africa produces more than two-thirds of all the gold mined yearly in the noncommunist world, and the country's gold reserves are believed to account for roughly half of the recoverable gold that exists in the world.

Despite government attempts to diversify South Africa's eco-nomic base, gold sales still ac-count for nearly 60 percent of foreign earnings, and fluctuations in gold prices still have a large effect on the overall economy. Wealth from the mines has played a key role in integrating

South Africa with the world economy, lifting the country above the destitution of neighboring states. Gold has also protected the country from foreign economic pressure. When the shooting of unarmed blacks at Sharpeville in 1961 prompted a flight of West-ern capital, for example, the country's recovery was financed by new domestic investment from recent gold discoveries in the Orange Free State.

The gold industry's need for a large and flexible labor supply has also helped shaped many of South Africa's racial and political institutions. Waves of migrant laborers, bound for the mines, have lent a form of economic legitimacy to discriminatory pass laws and segregated, all-male hostels. It is the only industry for which legislation mandating racial discrimination in employment re-

The scale of the industry is enormous. The miners' union alone has more than 500,000 workers. The union has called out on strike some 300,000 of its members, principally targeting the country's largest mining and From the start of the strike, the white government has promised not to interfere. But, if the past is any guide, the white government's reliance on gold earnings suggests that there will be a limit to its tolerance for strikes by blacks or

A memorable example of this came in 1922, when the South African military was called in to put down a three-month strike by white gold miners in a fierce showdown that left 231 men dead and 567 wounded.

Any fears of an imminent crisis in South African gold deliveries have yet to be felt on world markets, where prices have rema soft despite the strike. But U.S. experts have estimated that South Africa now maintains just one month's worth of gold reserves, and the Labor Monitoring Group, an independent research organization in South Africa, has imated that the strike has already begun costing the major mining companies as much as $7.5 million a day.

Dragonair To Fly To Chinese Cities

Reuters

HONG KONG — Hong Kong

Dragon Airlines Ltd. has been awarded a license to fly from the British colony to Beijing and Shanghai, the Hong Kong licensing authority said Tuesday.

The government said it approved Dragonair's application for scheduled service, placing the airline in competition with Cathay Pacific Airways Ltd., a wire Pacific Ltd. subsidiary, and CAAC, China's state run airline state run airline.

The airline must now gain approval from the British and Chinese governments under a bilateral air accord before it can operate scheduled flights. Dragonair now flies to Thailand and Japan and operates charter flights to several smaller cities in China.

Gillette Turns Down 3d Bid By Revlon, of $5.41 Billion

NEW YORK - Gillette Co.'s board has rejected Revion Group Inc.'s unsolicited $5.41 billion takeover offer and reiterated the company's intention to remain independent.

The directors' announcement on Monday came after the stock market closed. Officials at Revion were not available for comment.

The rejection of the $47-a-share offer marks the third time that Gillette has spurned Revion's chairman, Ronald O. Pereiman. In November, Revion dropped a $32.50-a-share, or $4.12 billion, bid after Gillette agreed to buy back Revion's 13.9 percent stake in the company, giving Revion a $34 million profit. In June, Gillette rebuffed a sweetened Revion bid of $40.50 a share or $4.66 billion.

Mr. Perelman's third offer came despite a standstill agreement reached between Reviou and Gillette in November. As part of that agreement, Reviou agreed not to purchase Gillette stock or to seek control of the company for 10 years.

Partly because of the nature of the standstill agreement, analysis had been skeptical that Mr. Perelman's latest offer would win much favor with Gillette.

reported that two Minnespolis financiers, Irwin L. Jacobs and Carl R. Pohlad, might start a proxy fight or make a bid for Gillette.

Mr. Jacobs hall acknowledged that he holds a substantial position in Gillette, but has declined to discuss whether he would seek to cust

Mr. Perelman has good reason to hope that a potential buyer goes after Gillette. According to the standstill agreement, Reviou stands to make a huge windfall if Gillette is sold before Nov. 24. Right now, Atan's stock fell $1, to close at $12.50, on the American Stock Exchange on Tuesday, while Federated Group shares gained 37.5 cents, to $6.125, in over-the-counter trading on Monday. Major U.S. dealers, such as Computerland and Businessland, have declined to carry Atari machines, partly because Atari has an image as a video game company whose machines would not appeal to corporate customers. Two-thirds of Atari appeal to comporate customers. I wo-united of Alam personal computers are sold in Europe.

The retailers perhaps are also wary of Atari's chairman, Jack Tramiel, who, in his days as head of Commodore International Ltd., undermined his dealers by slashing prices and moving his comput ers to mass merchandisers such as K mart Corp.

Atari now has 800 dealers, Mr. Pratt said. That is about one-half to one-third the number of Apple Computer Inc. and International Business Machines Corp. dealers, and many Atari dealers are not computer specialists.

The acquisition, approved by Federated's board and to be made through a tender offer beginning on Friday, comes as Atari is preparing to introduce two more powerful versions of its ST computer, to be called the Mega-ST, as well as an IBM clone.

The STs start at $600, a fraction of the cost of an equivalent Apple Macintosh or IBM PC, but there is less popular software available for the ST.

Federated, based in City of Commerce, near Los Angeles, already sells computers, including Ataris, ommodores and some Asian IBM clones.

Mr. Tramiel, who built Commodore into a large home computer company and then left in a disagreement with the company's chairman, bought Atari, which is based in Sunnyvale, California, in 1984 from Warner Communications Inc.

In the second quarter of 1987, Atari earned $13.5 million, 39 percent up from a year earlier, while sales grew 16 percent, to $70.7 million.

Federated Group, which pioneered the use of large stores to sell consumer electronics goods at prices, posted a loss of $895,000 on revenues of $91.1 million in the quarter ended in May, but said it expects a slight profit for the year.

New Zealand Firm Launches Hostile Bid for Guinness Peat

LONDON - Equiticorp Holdings Ltd., a New Zealand-based financial services company, said Tuesday that it has raised its stake in Guinness Peat Group PLC to 35.6 percent and plans to make a full bid valuing the British conglomerate at £338.4 million ($552 million).

Guinness Peat, whose interests include merchant banking and the Irish-based airline GPA Group Ltd., said Tuesday that the Equiticorp offer was "wholly inade-

Australian Firm To Buy Fluor Unit

NEW YORK - Australianbased Dalihold Investments Pty. said Tuesday it had signed a definilive agreement to buy about 90 percent of St. Joe Gold Corp. and other gold properties owned by Fluor Corp. for $500 million.

Dallhold holds the family interest of Alan Bond, the founder and chairman of brewing group Bond Corp. Holdings Ltd. Dallhold said it intends to retain St. Joe Gold's properties and to bring into early production additional mines in the United States.

Dailhold said it and associated companies produce more than 300,000 ounces of gold a year.

Last week, the prospect of an Equiticorp bid prompted Guinness Peat to say an offer would be unwelcome. At the time, Equiticorp disclosed that it held 29.7 percent of Guinness. Under British law, any company raising its stake above 30 percent in a British company must launch a full bid. Peter Hunt, managing director of Equiticorp's investment arm. Capital Corp. International Ltd... said the bid would be worth 110 pence per Guinness Peat share. The shares closed Tuesday at 111 pence on the London Stock Exchange, up 1.5 pence from Monday's close.

Mr. Hunt said Equiticorp has no plans to break up Guinness Peat, but that it is primarily interested in its corporate finance and lending operations. Guinness Peat's industry and geographical diversifica-tion was also attractive, he said.

Bundesbank Seen Keeping Steady Monetary Stance

FRANKFURT - The Bundesbank will decide to maintain 2 steady monetary stance at its regular policy-making council meeting on Thursday, according to many economists. Although anti-inflation hard-liners within the council will probably continue to press for firmer interest rates, the majority belief that such action could imperil a fragile economy and anger foreign allies is expected to prevail the economists said Tuesday. Thus, the 3 percent discount rate and 5 percent Lombard rate will probably be left unchanged and the bank is likely to try to keep shortterm call money within a range of 3.6 to 4 percent, economists said. On Tuesday, the central bank offered 8.1 billion Deutsche marks through a 15-day, securities repurchase pact fixed at 3.6 percent, as the key short-term rate neared 4 percent "It's clear that the Bundesbank does not want higher interest rates," said Norbert Vowinckel, head of macroeconomic research at Bank in Liechtenstein (Frankfurt) GmbH. "It daren't do so because of the currency aspect and the economy aspect," he adde Although the dollar is now around the 1.82 DM level that it was trading at at the time of the Paris currency accord in February, it could begin to slide if West Germany were seen to be favoring a tighter credit stance. This would make mark-denominated investments more attractive, economists said.

The other major restraint on any Bundesbank tightening is the economy, economists said. Anthony Thomas, chief international nist at Kleinwort Grieveson Securities in London, estimated that the economy will grow 1.5 percent this year, adjusted for inflation, compared with official estimates of 1.5 percent to 2 percent.

POP-UP: New Ads Prove Catchy

(Continued from first finance page) change that. The association, which has more than 800 member publications, is projecting 5 percent growth in ad pages during the second half of 1987, compared with the like 1986 period, Mr. Caldwell

In addition, some advertisers are finding themselves with almost nowhere else to turn. "Advertising distilled spirits on television is out of the question," said Michel Roux, president of Carillon Importers Ltd which distributes Swedishmade Absolut vodka, "The idea of bringing the sense of sound to our ads therefore struck us as revolupionary. The concept has already been tried in France. In March 1985, a musical ad for IBM appeared in a mass-market French ma Point. But the ad could be placed only in the magazine's newsstand editions. The technology to keep the tiny microchip from being crushed in mailed copies has only recently been perfected.

Even scent strips - which have traditionally given consumers a free whiff of after-shave or smear of lipstick - took an odd turn this month. Rolls-Royce Motors placed an ad in Architectural Digest that featured the distinctive leather smell of the interior of a new Rolls-Royce, "It's our way of busting through the clutter," said Rochelle Udell, senior vice president and creative director at Della Femina, Travisano & Partners, the New York agency that created the ad. But the new technologies bring with them new problems. Specifically: The ads are expensive and take a long time to produce. The singing ads can cost advertisers upward of $1 per copy, and the pop-up ads and holograms cost up to 50 cents each. Conventional print ads typically cost a fraction of that. Many of these new print ads also require long lead times. The singing ad campaign, for example, had to be planned nearly a year in advance.

(Continued from first finance page) diate, the benchmark U.S. crude oil for immediate delivery, rose by 28 cents after OPEC's announcement. but gave up ground to close at $18.64 a barrel, only 4 cents up from Monday.

On the European spot market, Britain's North Sea Brent crude gained 35 cents to $17.55 after umbling by $1.05 Monday.

Oil prices, which sank to a 10year low of a little less than $10 a barrel in July last year, firmed to above $20 after OPEC's apparently successful meeting in June.

They began slipping in late July amid reports that the cartel was overproducing because of tensions in the Gulf. Most analysts had feared that the Gulf situation would push prices sharply higher. Mr. Lukman implicitly confirmed this trend on Tuesday, when he said at a news conference in Lagos: "It should be obvious" that to have lured producers into overproducing." "Recent low oil prices," he said, "are a signal of what is likely to happen without a positive response from all oil producers, OPEC and the tension in the Gulf "ought not non-OPEC alike." Mr. Lukman said that output this month would not exceed 1.2 ceiling, and said that July's produc-million barrels a day over OPEC's tion was about 1 million barrels above quota. He said he did not rule out the possibility that a full emergency

OPEC meeting could be convened Meanwhile, a spokesman for Norway's Oil Ministry said that Norway, which agreed to limit production by 7.5 percent to help OPEC's effort to stabilize prices at around $18 a barrel, could end its cutback if oil prices stayed below that figure and OPEC did nothing to reimpose discipline. Norway is not an OPEC member.

Global Trading Takes Further Step as Stock-Index Option Spans Atlantic In the United States, the Major Market chuk, senior vice president for options and By Stan Hinden tical index option has traded "in two market-Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Global securities trading advanced another step this week when options contracts on the American Stock Exchange's widely watched Major Market Index began trading on Amsterdam's European Options Exchange.

The Major Market Index option allows investors, speculators and hedgers to bet on the direction of the market, as represented by 20 blue-chip stocks that actually trade on the New York Stock Exchange.

Of the 20 stocks, 17 are included on the Dow Jones industrial average of 30 leading U.S. shares. Paul G. Stevens, executive vice president at the Amex, said that the arrangement with Amsterdam, which began on over-the-counter market swaps stock quotes Monday, marked the first time that an idenplaces on two continents."

However, in the growing trend toward internationalization of markets, there have been similar links involving financial futures contracts. For example, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and the Singapore Interna-tional Monetary Exchange allow traders to trade the same Eurodollar or currency futures contracts on each other's exchanges.

The Amex's two-year effort to develop the Amsterdam linkage is part of a fierce com-petitive struggle among U.S. exchanges for international business. The NYSE extended its trading day by opening at 9:30 A.M. instead of 10 A.M. to create a wider overlap with European markets, and the competing with the London Stock Exchange.

Index, also known by its trading symbol, XMI, is the second most-active index option after the Standard & Poor's 100.

Howard L. Kramer, assistant director of the division of market regulation at the Securities and Exchange Commission, said investors in the United States and Europe will be able to open and close positions in the XMI options in either Amsterdam or at the Amex in New York. Trading will be governed by the same rules at both exchange

The Enropean Options Exchange will trade the option from noon until 4:30 P.M., Amsterdam time. With the Amex opening at 9:30 A.M., it will give the two exchanges a one-hour overlap.

futures at Prudential-Bache Securities in New York. "I would expect most of the interest from Europe to be investors initiating positions in their time zone and closing m out later in the day in New York." He said that a key problem was that trading in the 20 securities that constitute the XMI did not begin in New York until 9:30 A.M. Thus, a European investor might not want to open an index position before know-ing how the affected stocks would move.

Joseph Stefanelli, vice president for options marketing at the Amex, predicted that the XMI, which trades an average of 75,000 contracts a day, would trade 1,500 to 2,000 in the first month in Amsterdam and eventually ne-hour overlap.

MOONRISE, MOONSET

By Tadeusz Konwicki. Translated by Richard Lourie. 344 pages. $19.95. Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 19 Union Square West, New York, N. Y. 10003.

THE narrator of "Moonrise, Moonset" seems bent on being unlikable. He is critical and querulous, boastful and self-pitying. And he draws attention to his defects. What's going on here?" he asks after a litany of comlaints. This plaintive tone disgusts me. Elsewhere, he takes the words out of his reader's mouth: "I seem to be writing out of spite."

It's a pose, of course. Tadeusz Konwicki is an accomplished enough stylist to make his narrator, who is inseparable from the author of this very personal work, altogether ingratiating. But that would dilute the bitterness at the heart of the book.

Labeled a "real-life novel," "Moonrise, Moonset, lurches along from reminiscence to diatribe to confession to lamentation. The autobiography is entangled with politics; there are frequent pauses for reflections on Poland's grim history, subject always to the power of its big neighbor: "For centuries now, the Poles have been sentenced by Moscow and Orthodoxy to death, the death of the Polish state and nation." Konwicki, a prominent novelist, screenwriter and director in Poland, seems to be struggling in what he thinks of as his old age (he is only 61, but physical ailments are accu-mulating) to get at the crux of his own past and that of his unfortunate country.

As a teen-ager during the German occupation in World War II, he fought with the Polish tion in World War II, he fought with the Polish Home Army against the Germans, and when the Russians moved in at the war's end, he found himself briefly lighting against them as well. Then, for 15 years, he belonged to the Communist Party and supported the regime imposed on Poland by Moscow, a period that he recalls with shame: "My friends dragged me into it, as if it were a beer house or a brothel." For the past decade, his work has been pub-For the past decade, his work has been published by the underground press.

What the author calls his "grotesque journal" is full of anecdotes, some about his rivalries with writers who have made their peace with the authorities; most of the names ring no bells, and he seems to be straining to make private grudges matters of public import. His comments on better known writers whom he admires, such as Milosz, Adam Michnik and Stanislaw Lem, are not all that interesting. Konwicki seems to know when his mensoir is not working. Now and then, he expresses exasted peration with his clogged, lopsided, sipshod writing. What holds one, intermittently, is the passion of a writer whose hopes seem to have died 40 years ago and who has had to live and work in a society that he despises. He doesn't make it easy, but like him or not, it's hard to remain unshaken by the strength of his writing. in the muscular translation of Richard Lourie. or the depth of his pain over the horrors of his country's history.

LONDON - Italian foreplay leaves nothing to imagination Nothing in the world lasts longer or touches more heights of passion than Italy's buildup toward a new season of soccer. Nowhere is a newcomer embraced with more sciniation; nowhere does greater danger

Ian Rush, the new Juventus center-forward, symbolizes this summer's Italian mania. Because he scored 10 goals in six warm-up games, Rush attracted bigger news-print than Diego Maradona. And because the headlines grew so tall, Rush now lies in a Turin clinic, where doctors grapple with the risk of hastening his return as fast as the box office demands. First diagnoses say a torn muscle on the front of his left thigh will need 40 days' res.. There are not 20 days until the new season, and there may not be patience enough to endure nature's course. Medics are still probing, hoping that when swelling subsides Rush's suspected torn fibers turn into ones merely overly stretched.

Meanwhile, Juventus feeds this to reporters: "Without being mercenary, Ian is money in the bank to ua. He is the most popular player in Italy. People turn up to see him. We are taking a second opinion. We you score. don't want to lose him unnecessari-We are not putting him at any no safe way for him to play."

Those experts include Michel Platini and Liam Brady, who both felt the high and mighty demands of Juventus. Do the business, and life with Agnelli runs smoother than a Rolls Royce; lose a touch of inspiration, and even if you're winning championships the ride begins to feel like a Fiat with the choke wide open.

avoided a seventh straight loss. Hrbek singled in Steve Lombardozzi from third base with one out in the ninth inning, giving Minnesota a 5-4 triumph over Detroit in a battle of the American League's divisional leaders.

Lombardozzi led off the ninth with a single, and Willie Hernandez relieved Eric King. Lombardozzi went to second on Randy Bush's sacrifice and to third on Al Newman's single to left. Kirby Puckett was walked intentionally to load the bases before Hrbek singled.

"I was just trying to be as relaxed as I can be," said Hrbek, who is noted for his power. "He threw a fastball down the middle and I managed to slap it to right."

"That's the key to being a profes-sional to know your limitations," said Tom Kelly, the Minnesota manager. "Kent did a good job. He put a nice swing on the ball and just slapped it to right."

"It's a big right just to put an end to the skid," Lombardozzi said. "We had a talk before the game and nobody was going to try to be Super-man. We're all in this together."

The Twins had lost all six games on a swing through Detroit and Boston. They are now 43-18 at the Metrodome and 24-42 on the road. The Tigers took a 4-3 lead in the sixth. Darrell Evans singled, moved to second on Jim Morrison's single and scored on Chet Lemon's single. Pat Sheridan walked, and Tom Brookens's single drove in Morrison and Lemon. Minnesota tied the score in the seventh, when Lombardozzi singled in Tom Brunansky We sure had our chances to blow them out three or four innings in a row," Evans said, "We didn't get the big hits, and that's the thing about playing at home — you get that last time at the plate and the other team doesn't get a chance. You can't let good teams do that." Tiger Manager Sparky Anderson has another view. "You're gonna win so many games and you're gonna lose so many games," he said. "I don't think it has nothing to with home or road. I don't play any different anywhere. I'm just not smart enough to do that." Blue Jays 7, Mariners 3: In Scatdoubled home Claudell Washington from second base with two out in the 11th, lifting New York over California. Gary Lucas walked Washington to start the inning. One out later, Washington advanced on Don Mattingly's slow grounder to second. Pagliarulo folowed with a shot down the rightfield line.

Rangers 4, Royals 2: In Kansas City, Missouri, Bobby Witt limited the Royals to three hits while striking out seven and walking eight in his 7% innings, and Scott Fletcher drove in two runs for Texas. Witt has gone 49 consecutive starts in his career without a complete game, the most of any active pitcher.

White Sox 6, Red Sox 3: In Bos ton, Carlton Fisk hit his 100th career home run at Fenway Park to help Jose DeLeon beat the Red Sox for the second time in a week. De-Leon is 4-0 against Boston lifetime. Giants 6, Phillies 1: In the National League, in Philadelphia. Rick Reuschel, making his first start since being acquired for the stretch run, allowed five hits over seven innings to lead San Francisco past the Phillies. Reuschel, who last week was pitching for last-place Pittsburgh, struck out a seasonhigh eight and walked none, keeping the Giants a half-game ahead of Houston in the Western Division.

Astros 5, Cardinals 2: In St. Louis, Bob Knepper pitched a seven-hitter en route to his first complete game of the season as Houston beat the Cardinals. Knepper is 4-1 and has an earned-run average of 3,29 in his last six appearances after a 3-12 start. The Astros have won 10 of their last 11 games.

Mets 1, Dodgers 0: In New York, Rick Aguillera, in his first appearance since May 20, returned from an elbow injury to hold Los Angeles to four hits through 7% innings.
Pirates 5, Reds 4: In Pittsburgh,

Tarrell, Chip (7), Hernause (1) and Misnes "We would not be opposed to anything that would make people feel safer," George Young, general manag-er of the National Football League team, said Monday. But the area was called environmentally safe by the chairman of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, which owns and runs the Meadowlands complex in which Giants Stadium stands. Jon F. Hanson termed reports implying the contrary "highly irresponsible."

Meanwhile, Mark Murphy, vice president of the players association, said the union would like its next collective bargaining agreement to include a study of mortality rates at all NFL stadiums. Murphy expressed concern at the number of cancer cases on Giant teams.

"Certainly something should be done here," said Murphy, who was at the Giant training camp at Pleasantville, New York. "The numbers indicate that. Who knows what it's from? Who knows what it is?" Murphy was in camp to talk with players about negotiations to replace a contract that will expire at the end of the month. The NFLPA brought up the idea of the mortality studies earlier this year.

Tackle Karl Nelson is the latest Giant to contract cancer, having been diagnosed during the weekend as having Hodgkin's disease, a cancer of the lymphatic system. Two other Giant players died of cancer, while one has survived. Defensive end George Martin, the team's player representative and a member of the NFLPA executive committee, also endorsed the plan for testing around all NFL stadiums. "We're approaching this thing as a union body." Martin said. "We will approach management and we will try to establish a fund research package to see if the environment comes into play." Hanson said in a statement that reports linking the cancer cases to the stadium "are totally without foundation, and are based upon innuendo, false inference, factual inaccuracy and uninformed speculation." While the complex is constructed on a former landfill, he said, there is no evidence of toxic materials. "Toxics, including mercury, have been found in land adjacent to the complex," he said, adding that the tract is separated from the complex by berrus made of trucked-in fill.

The Giants moved into the stadium in 1976. The first cancer case on the team was diagnosed early in 1980 when linebacker Dan Lloyd was found to have lympho ma. He recovered, but was forced to give up football. Running back Doug Kotar was diagnosed as having a malignant brain tumor in August 1982. He died 16 months later at age 32. Running back John Tuggle was found to have a malignant tumor in his shoulder in 1984. It eventually spread to his lungs and he died, at 25, last August. Dr. Frederick Cohen, chairman of the New Jersey State Commission on Cancer Research, said Tuesday that the cancer cases were a "coincidence."

He said there is no evidence that any were related to the stadium environment. He said that the team's tenure at the Meadowlands has been too short to show cancer and added that the players were stricken by different forms of cancer, further diminishing the chance they were caused by a single agent.

Another person watching the situation carefully was Clark Gaines, an NFLPA staff member. Two years ago, a benign tumor was discovered in his brain. At the time, Gaines was a coach with the New Jersey Generals of the now-defunct United States Football League. The team played its games at Giants Stadium.

"I think studies should be done," he said. "Do you have to wait for another possible death?"

Cancer Cases Puzzle NFL Giants

Karl Nelson, the fourth Giant to be stricken.

training camp in Pleasantville, New York, doesn't believe the cancers are coincidental. "There is concern," said the Yale graduate. "As one educated to be a scientist, I know there is no such thing as absolute scientific phenomenon.

"We've been assured by reponsible people in this organization that there is no reason for concern. But instinctively, when you see something happen to a disproportionate number of people, it makes you question whether there is some internal factor."

Billy Ard, an offensive guard, shrugged off the possible dangers from the environment. "Even if they found a reason for all this, what are they going to do tear down the stadium? Growing up in New Jersey, that never bothered me because it was a part of it. If grew up in Wyoming I might feel different."

Like many teammates. Robbie Jones, an inside linebacker, said he had no answers. But he did make an interesting observation: "A lot of football players die young, period," he said. "The players association has been pushing for a mortality study." Harry Carson, the inside linebacker who has been a Giant since 1976, has been a teammate of the four victims. "I am tired of going through this," Carson said.

"I don't know now much more I can take of guys getting ill. It makes you wonder what is going on around here. This is the play world. Karl Nelson is playing in the real world. Yeal. I'm afraid. Every time I feel something strange in my body, it makes me wonder. When the team breaks training camp Wednesday for Giants Stadium, he said, "We'll all be going down there wondering. 'What's that smell, what's the deal with the water? If we get a cut, will it get infected?' I' J.D. Maarleveld of the Tampa Bay Bucs was diagnosed while in college as having Hodgkin's disease. He grew up in Rutherford, a community of 21,000, adjacent to the Meadowlands. The town had 32 cases of leukemia diagnosed in 1978. "Something's going on," Maarleveld said. "There Strong safety Kenny Hill, speaking at the team's definitely seems to be a connection." (AP, NYT)

IAAF Widens Drug Testing

impose year-round drug tests of athletes in competition and in training, the head of its medical commission said Tuesday. Under new proceedures designed to prevent the use of illegal substances, the IAAF will conduct random tests where and when it chooses, "to chase the cheaters right into their training havens and catch them redhanded," said Arne Ljungqvist, an IAAF vice president who also heads the medical group. "We are fully aware that people are working on substances that 'conceal' the use of drugs," Liungovist said. He said he expects a test report on probenecid, mentioned at the recent Pan American Games as a potential drug concealer, and other substances within a few weeks. "Should our tests prove that these substances conceal drugs, we will ban them." But Ljungqvist said the fight was also against the use of for-ROME - International track bidden drugs, specifically anatheir use, the IAAF needs "to innovate and make advance tests, as a preventive measure."

Some athletes use drugs in training and minor competition, sometimes taking advantage of a relaxed attitude by local officials. Then they escape because they stop at a given time before a big event comes up, so the steroids can no longer be detected," Ljungqvist said.

* 1.00 U.S.

"But the damage is done." He said that the new rules, approved by the IAAF Council on Monday and subject to pro-forma ratification by the IAAF Congress this week, meant the commission could impose atrandom tests in any country.

When and as needed, the commission will send its own officials to carry out the tests, mainly at major championships, Ljungqvist said. He emphasized that the IAAF would rely on "surprise moves."

The Gadgetry of Power

By Russell Baker

Neditor of The Washington Post recently criticized the men down there for wearing power neckties. I find it beguiling, and I sympathize with those men, although the letter writer's description of what a power necktie looks like was vague. Small brown figures on a yellow background, sort of, apparently.

A genuine power necktie, of course, would be a rope with a poose, but these power things that people wear and do nowadays aren't really about power. They are about powerlessness. They are ways people devise to kid themselves out of feeling like victims of a world out of control.

In New York, where kidding yourself is half the game, they eat power lunches and power breakfasts, ride in power automobiles, live at power addresses, wear power eyeglasses, fill out their expense accounts in power offices and frolic at power parties.

I am not making this up. These people really talk about power food, power addresses, power this and power that with only the faintest trace of irony, and no selfmockery at all.

You can see how New Yorkers might need to kid themselves this way. Being big-time in New York is not such a big deal, even for the truly big-timers, who can be summoned to Washington and there browbeaten, abused and slandered by some barely literate Congressgrits and lunches on bean soup.

So New York produces this incessant pretense to power, which accounts for a lot of its petty cruelty as well as its farce. You hear grown men, expensively tailored, even manicured and sprayed with imported scents, boasting about the location of their theater seats. Minor executives behave like bushleague Mussolinis to make humanity gape at the power they wield.

The one place in the country where there was real power, I once thought, was Washington. They had the button. They had the IRS. They had the Marines, the B-52s, the CIA, the Food and Drug Administration, the FBI, the federal penitentiaries.

But especially, they had all those civil service people, stretching inunbroken ranks to the horizon farthar than the eye could see, each and every one of them highly skilled at making you understand that you amounted to nothing, absolutely nothing, and that if you didn't quit bothering them and go away, you would soon regret it.

If power knickknacks have reached Washington, the sense of powerlessness must now be com-plete. But why? Surely it is because the country has now been mechanized beyond any human's power to obtain a sensible result from the machinery's labor.

Drive through the fringes of any large metropolitan area, and what do you see? Large glass office buildings under construction. Soon these glass boxes will be filled with machines busily beeping electronic talk to each other.

Which isn't the worst of it. Those machines will also be canceling vour reservations, billing you preposterous sums for goods you haven't bought, destroying your health insurance records, den ing you to the police as a convicted drug kingpin, retargeting several ICBMs to hit your garden shed, and urging the IRS to impound your wife and grandchildren.
Those buildings also contain people for whom the machines are iopelessly mysterious. Already buildings like these have sprung up all over the country, all of them manned — yes, ladies, and woman who breakfasts powerlessly on grits and lunches on bean soup.

manued too — by people highly trained to not have the faintest idea what imbeciles the machines are. and even more highly trained at not being able to do anything about it.

We all deal with these highly trained people in glass boxes housing the machinery of powerless-ness. Lately I have been begging an airline, which employs a batch of them, to return the $238 it snatched from me last October just before canceling my flight. Nothing registers with the mar-velously trained incompetents or imbecile machines. Letters are ignored. If I phone:

We have been highly trained not only to know nothing, but also to do nothing, sir. Please soak your head and have a nice day." She hangs up. I retort with a DOWCT SILCET.

Pursuing the Powerful Art of Aging

By John Russell New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Though nothing if not specific, "oldage art" as a name lacks glamour. It makes us think of elderly persons pecking in dudgeon at a preelectric typewriter, turning away in despair from an unfinished canvas or giving up on a commissioned concerto because they cannot think how to get beyond the opening tutti. That name is just too gloomy. "How about coming round for some old-age art?" is not an invitation by which courtship can be advanced.

Old-age art is a name coined in 1972 by Kenneth Clark, the art historian, museum director, author and narrator of the television series "Civilization," in a lecture called "The Artist Grows Old." It refers to work done in old age in a distinctive, innovatory and often problematic style by creative people in all the arts, from Aeschylus in the "Oresteia" in 458 B.C. to this year's music by Elliott Carter and paintings by Willem de Kooning and Francis Bacon. Late work in that sense, has a specifically late style, easier to recognize than to define.

Old-age art includes some of the greatest of human achieve-ments. It would be a waste of life not to know the late work of Titian and Rembrandt, the last plays of Shakespeare, the late nuartets of Beethoven, Giuseope Verdi's "Falstaff" and Giovanni Battista Tiepolo's ceiling in the bishop's palace in Würzburg, West Germany.

The same could be said of the late paintings of J.M.W. Turner and Georges Braque, the late pastels of Edgar Degas, the last plays of Henrik Ibsen, "The Ambassa-dors" by Henry James, "Metamorphosen" by Richard Strauss, the last poems of William Butler Yeats and the last films of Akira Kurosawa and Luis Bunuel.

Old-age art has not come to an end, either. The English novelist Anthony Powell is 81, and after he completed the 12 volumes of his "A Dance to the Music of Time" in 1975 he could have put his feet up on the sofa. But he didn't and his last novel. "The Fisher King" (1986), has one of the most beautiful concluding

A self portrait by Rembrandt, painted in 1658 when the artist was 52; Tatsuya Nakadai in "Ran," Akira Kurosawa's film adaptation, at age 75, of "King Lear."

Willem de Kooning is 83, but his most recent paintings break new ground in a lean, serpentine idiom. Louise Bourgeoir is 75, but her every new sculpture is full of what Clark called "marvelous and embarrassing psychological in-sights." Merce Cunningham is "old," as dancers go, but what he is doing with his company is as innovative as ever.

Nothing in the current season of promenade concerts in the Royal Albert Hall in London is likely to be fresher or more surprising than the "Roaratorio" that Cunningham and his longtime colleague John Cage contributed last year to the Next Wave Festival at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

If work of this kind has a special fascination for us, it is not simply because, in Clark's words, "old, even very old, artists have added something of immense val-ue to the sum of human experience." It is because the late work of major creative artists has so often been unprecedented, problematic, difficult and above all fearless.

There are no absolute rules in paragraphs in the long history of art. Brahms did not by any means the English novel. there is nothing fierce nor confusing about the two clarinet sonatas that he wrote for his favorite executant, Richard Muhlfeld.

Strauss in youth was a master of turnult and boisterous exaggeration, but in "Metamorphosen an elegy for the destruction of Europe that he wrote in 1945. all that was laid aside. It is the prerogative of the great artist to take leave of life in his own way. In relation to late works of art.

every generation defines itself. In doing so, it reveals insights, predispositions and blind spots unknown to its predeces cannot imagine today what possessed the burghers of Amsterdam to turn down that most arresting of late Rembrandts, Conspiracy of Claudius Civilis," and refuse to pay for it. Within our own lifetimes, the late works of Igor Stravinsky were thought of as willful, spindly and con-trived. As for late Picasso, it was dismissed as senility made visible. It is a discovery of our own day that there is such a thing as the deliberately terrible late style. In painting, Francis Picabia, Gior-gio de Chirico and for a moment We ery canon of "good taste" in order to tread new, strange and quite possibly dangerous ground. In late Picabia, the source of much in more recent painting can be found. Historians used to believe that everything important in the arts came in through the front door, but with Picabia the new art climbed in through a forbidden entrance at the back. Performer and director also have their late styles. What is Pe-ter Brooks's "Mahabharata," due in October as part of the Brooklyn Academy of Music's Next Wave Festival, if not a prime example of late style? There is a late style in performance, too. When Feodor Chaliapin was in his 60s, he gave song recitals that in conventional terms were completely crazy. He broke every imaginable rule. People laughed when he began. But in no time at all they were hushed, subjugative, captive, and by the time he was through with Schubert's "Doppelgänger" and Schumann's "Die Beiden Grenadiere" there was a degree of swed attention that this listener has rarely heard
